The amendment moved by Labour Members to the Government's bill to extend conscription into the armed forces was defeated by 386 votes to 85, and the bill was read the second time.—Reuter.

Don Juan On Franco's Proclamation

Will Not Recognise
Validity

Lisbon, Apr. 1.
The official spokesman for Don Juan told Reuter today: "Don Juan was not consulted by General Franco on the new succession act by which Caudillo has proclaimed himself the head of the Spanish monarchy. Don Juan cannot recognise a law which is devoid of two essential requirements: Sanction of the Spanish people and his own consent as the legitimate claimant to the Spanish crown."
Spanish monarchists throughout the world awaited the declaration by Don Juan, 32-year old pretender to the Spanish throne on last night's announcement by General Franco that Spain is again to become a kingdom—but a kingdom without a king, so long as General Franco is the head of the State.
In Madrid, monarchist circles regarded it as unlikely that Don Juan would accept the conditions attaching to General Franco's proclamation that the person of royal blood who succeeds General Franco must accept the fundamental laws of the present regime.
Italian monarchists expect that the news from Spain will give a powerful impetus to their aspirations for the restoration of a monarchy in Italy.
A French Foreign Office spokesman said the French policy towards Spain would not be modified in any way.—Reuter.

FRANCO ATTACKED

London, Apr. 2.
In a violent attack on Generalissimo Franco, the Manchester Guardian today said that the "shattered Fascist regime is not to be consolidated by decrees... what will bring him down is decisive and energetic action of united Spaniards."
Radio Moscow said: "The hated face of this Caudillo bred of a Fuehrer and a Duce is not to be hidden under the mask of a regent... Franco wishes to console himself for the loss of a master who made him a creature, naming himself regent in the hope of pleasing new masters, whom he is ready to serve... Franco decided Spain should be a kingdom and with the same case makes himself king... But Franco is attempting to govern Fascism from the eyes of the world behind the cloak of royal purple, the masquerade is doomed to failure."—United Press.

British Divorce Laws

THE Law, as an instrument of cold reasoning, is probably right and proper when it declares, through the High Court of Appeal, that a wife's refusal to live in "normal married life" does not constitute sufficient grounds for her husband to obtain a divorce. But the lay mind will find it hard to discover the justice of such a ruling, just as it will be bewildered by the findings of a Leeds divorce court judge in which he declared that the woman who was being sued by her husband had committed adultery, but that the co-respondent had not. Both cases, in fact, give fine points to A. P. Herbert's classical satire on English divorce laws—"Holy Deadlock." In that unsuccessful attempt, through a best-seller, to introduce a few amendments which would make the divorce laws slightly less legallyistic, rigid and more appropriate to the times, Herbert developed the theme of a man who, acting on the highest principles, for the future happiness of his wife, fulfilled every legal requirement in providing evidence of infidelity (at the same time suffering considerable discomfort and embarrassment), only to run into a stu-

Plane Survivors' Hair-Raising Adventures

Sydney, Apr. 1.
Four men who survived a Dutch Dakota crash landing in Australia's most remote wilderness reached safety after five hair-raising days of adventure, during which they killed and ate a pet dog and machine-gunned a rampaging crocodile, it was reported today.
The four men, Captain van Nifterik, Radio Operator van Buijon and two passengers named Houniet and Barnard, were weak from lack of food, footsore and weary from their ordeal.

They started from the site where the Dakota made a belly landing in a dense forest and covered nearly 100 miles down the rapid Katherine River. When they started, they had 40 oranges and two cans of condensed milk.
The plane carried seven persons, three of whom were left with the wreckage. No one was injured in the landing.

FOOD AND GEAR LOST

Two rafts were built to float the party and their gear down the Katherine. On the first day one of the rafts overturned and gear and food were lost. On the third day, they killed one of the two dogs with them and ate it. A crocodile attacked the remaining raft and they killed it with a Sten gun.
During the third day they came to a 30-foot waterfall with banks so steep they could not get down. They put an appeal for help on the remaining raft, shoved it over the waterfall and hoped for the best. Almost drowned and Barnard had to rescue him, losing his shoes in the process.

The loss of shoes in rocky country was serious. A map case was cut up to make a pair of sandals for Barnard.

CAPTAIN'S STORY

Captain van Nifterik said: "The mountains were terrible. We had to do a lot of climbing and each mountain gave way to a deep gorge. We were dizzy from lack of food and lack of sleep. During the day flies annoyed us and at night mosquitoes almost drove us crazy. The rocks were hot and Barnard's feet were bleeding, but we could not afford to rest. We kept on going in the direction we thought safety lay because we could not count on our being received by anyone. It sure was a relief when they found us."
"They" were the rescue party which had set out from Katherine and which met the airmen seven miles from Katherine. The four men, four men, lost considerable weight, but doctors said they would be all right.—United Press.

Madagascar Natives' Revolt Spreads

Tananarive, April 1.
The native uprising against the French in Madagascar, which began two days ago, has become general throughout the island and shows indications of having been prepared for some time, according to the French High Command in Tananarive, the capital.

Military reinforcements are being rushed to the most serious centres of trouble and military reprisal action on land and from the air is being carried out today.

The French authorities in Tananarive stated that warrants for the arrest of certain leaders of the separatist movement were issued today.

In a resume of the growth of uprisings, these authorities said that first indications of a native revolt in preparation reached the French administration last December and that security measures taken then halted the affair for the moment.
A few days ago new indications of an imminent uprising reached the French military authorities in Tananarive, 200 miles south of Tananarive, in the interior, and warnings were issued in Moramanga, 50 miles east of Tananarive on Sunday only a few hours before the telephone line between the capital and that military post was cut and the first of violent native attacks took place.

ATTACKS BROKEN OFF

Meanwhile, military reports from the scenes of two most serious fighting areas, stated that at Moramanga, 225 miles south of Tananarive, on the Madagascar east coast, the native attack which began on Monday had been "broken off," following French ground and air counter-attacks.

Several hundred natives were captured and three members of the European population were killed in the course of the attack.
At Moramanga, near Tananarive, where the separatists made their first attack on Sunday, armed with knives and spears, the French authorities reported calm today, while French patrols made reconnaissance sorties.
On the railway line northward from this town, nine Europeans were reported killed. Funeral services were held yesterday for these casualties at Moramanga, and wives and children from both Moramanga and Manakara were flown to Tananarive today.

SITUATION IN HAND

The French High Commissioner to Madagascar today flew over Vohiperona, island from Manakara on the railway line to Tananarive, and reported seeing several fires. The military authorities, however, reported that the situation in Vohiperona was well in hand, with a French column advancing on it from Manakara.

No information was given in this latest report of the situation at the northern tip of the island, where the natives were reported to have overcome the military camp near Diego Suarez and made off with supplies of rifles, machine-guns and ammunition.
M. Marius Moutet, French Minister of Colonies, sent a telegram today to the High Commissioner, expressing the Government's condolences to the survivors of the victims of the uprising. A special investigator from the Ministry of Colonies also took off from Paris today for Tananarive.—Reuter.

Lake Success, New York, Apr. 1.
The Soviet Union today approved the British proposal to hand the Palestine problem to a special General Assembly of the United Nations.
M. Andrei Gromyko, the Soviet representative on the United Nations, told the United Nations Secretariat he had "no objections."
Replies are still awaited from France and China.—Reuter.

The late King George II of Greece, whose death occurred suddenly yesterday.

Prince Paul Is New Monarch Of Greece

London, Apr. 1.
The new King of Greece, Paul I, was sworn in tonight in the presence of the Holy Synod of the Orthodox Church in a solemn ritual at the Royal palace a few hours after King George, his elder brother, had died suddenly from a heart attack.

While bells of 60 Athens churches tolled for the dead King, the Cabinet and Members of Parliament hurried through packed streets to pay homage to his successor.

The 38-year-old Premier, Dr. Dimitrios Maximos, handed King Paul the resignation of his Cabinet, in accordance with the constitution, and was mandated to form a new government.

The new King, a 46-year-old naval man, swore "In the Name of the Holy Trinity to protect the nation's religion, to respect the constitution and defend the freedom and integrity of Greece."

King Paul, in a message to the Greek people tonight, said: "We are facing to-day a struggle for our very existence, for our independence and our liberties. United we will bring it to a successful end."

Reuter's Diplomatic Correspondent, commenting on the death of the Greek King, says:
The Greek constitutional and political situation is expected in London to remain unchanged by the sudden death of King George II, one of the modern European monarchs whose position has been most subject to dispute in recent years.

On the constitutional issue the formal position is that the Greek constitution of 1935 is still in force. In 1935, on the restoration of the monarchy, the original monarchic constitution of 1864 was re-adopted with certain amendments.

STRENGTH OF MONARCHY

When last September the Greek nation voted on the Monarchy, the Royalist Government of Constantine Tsaldaris did not raise the issue of the constitution as such. The only question put before the voters was a limited and personal one of the return of the King. The succession of Prince Paul follows automatically under the existing constitution.

The real strength of the Monarchy in Greece to-day rests neither on the constitution nor on individual personalities. King George was never well known personally to any large proportion of his subjects and the years of the war exile in London produced at least for a time a certain estrangement between the King and the rank and file of the Greek people. King Paul has been even less known as a personality to most Greeks. He has never been the subject of such violent controversy as his brother.

The real strength of the Greek Monarchy to-day has been stated by many observers to rest perhaps paradoxically on the country's deep internal divisions and unsettled international relations. Many voters in last September's plebiscite thought that Monarchy was the only sound basis for a revolution at home and attack from outside.

The trouble in northern Greece is not likely to have lessened the force of these fears. It is, therefore, considered that the demand for reconsideration of the question of Monarchy or Republic for Greece is unlikely—except perhaps from the extreme left.—Reuter.

NEW KING IS 46

London, Apr. 2.
Forty-six-year-old Prince Paul who took the oath tonight to succeed the Greek throne as King Paul of Hellenes is a great grandson of Queen Victoria and is well known to Britons.

In 1938 he married Frederika Louise, daughter of the Duke of Brunswick and a Princess of Hanover.

He represented the Greek Crown at the funeral of King George V in London and at the coronation of King George VI.
Prince Paul has three children—six-year-old Prince Constantine who now becomes Crown Prince, Princess Sofia, aged nine, and Princess Irene, born in Cape Town in 1942.—United Press.

German Youths Demonstrate In Brunswick

Herford, Apr. 1.
A crowd of youths marched through the town of Brunswick today, overturning cars and smashing the windows of the Military Government offices in one of the first hunger demonstrations to be held outside the Ruhr.

It was officially announced that the military were standing by "to deal with this situation as necessary." Ten thousand people also demonstrated in the neighbouring city of Hanover in the pouring rain. They carried banners demanding bread, and marched to the main square, where speakers addressed them through a microphone.

The Hanover demonstration was "organised by one of the political parties and was orderly and without incident," an official announcement said.

The statement added that the demonstrations followed a meeting over the weekend between the local German Food Minister and Trade Union leaders to discuss the food situation.

Both Hanover and Brunswick lie in the centre of one of the chief grain-producing areas of the British zone of Germany and well outside of the Rhine-Ruhr industrial area.

FOOD SHORTAGES

Meanwhile, 30,000 Germans staged new demonstrations against food shortages in the towns of Duisburg and Hamburg today. The demonstrators carried placards reading "No Food, No Work" and "We are Hungry." No incidents were reported.

Between 10,000 and 12,000 people in Duisburg listened in the drizzling rain to speakers from the German Communist and Social Democrat parties.

The crowd cheered when a Trade Union speaker said: "The British are not exercising enough control over the food distribution."
The people, the speaker said, were beginning to regard the promises about food supplies on the way as "British and American propaganda." The meeting broke up without incident, and afterwards a delegation of the Trade Unionists went to the local British commander who promised to pass on any demands to the proper authorities.

There was a general standstill in Duisburg, where trams stopped running and shops and factories closed. Essential services were, however, maintained.

At Hamburg, German Trade Unionists ordered all industrial workers in the city to down tools today as a protest against lack of food and fuel. Workers were also told to march to police headquarters for a mass demonstration.

Coal production in the Ruhr mines has dropped by 20,000 tons daily as a result of absence of German miners from unofficial hunger strikes. It was announced in Essen today.

Miners who have taken part in strikes—estimated at about 13,000—are to lose their extra "poverty" rations for the next four-week period, it was learned. They will thus be deprived of the right to buy extra bacon, coffee, spirits and cigarettes.—Reuter.

Respite For Dov Gruner

Jerusalem, Apr. 2.
The High Court today granted a temporary order staying the execution of Dov Gruner, convicted Jewish extremist, to hear the case filed by Israel Rotah, Tel-Aviv Mayor, seeking to annul the emergency laws under which Gruner was tried.
The case was set for April 3. Meanwhile, eight persons were detained in searches in Jerusalem outskirts. At the plenary session of the Vaad Leumi, David Ben Gurion declared: "We must double our efforts to crush terrorism, even if it means by fighting them face to face."
It was the first open challenge of extremism by Hagannah. The Jewish underground army is against Ergun and Stern extremists.—United Press.

Shaw On Divorce Law Judgment

"Legislation Should Upset It"

London, Apr. 1.
Mr. Frederick Raymond Weatherley said today that he guessed he had better see his lawyer before he talked about further moves to free himself of his wife, who had renounced all but the social ties of their marital life.

Yesterday the House of Lords ruled that Weatherley had no grounds for divorce for desertion because Mrs. Weatherley was "finished" with normal married relations.

"I'll venture such a decision would shake you people over there in Roma," Weatherley said. He was contacted by the United Press, said he thoroughly agreed with the opinion of dissenting Lord Justice Scott and added that the judgment "did not mean much anyway because it was given in view of future legislation which will upset it—and should upset it."

Mr. Shaw, in a statement through his secretary, said: "I agreed with the opinion of the dissenting Justice. Judgment was given in view of future legislation, which will upset it—and should upset it."

LADY ASTOR'S VIEW

The ardent anti-divorce advocate, Lady Astor, told the United Press from her country home that she had not "studied" the Weatherley decision yet, but "as a good Christian, I feel very strongly that you must keep to the law no matter how hard the law is to keep." However, she said, "I have the greatest respect for the honesty and integrity of Lord Justice Scott," who was the dissenting voice in the House of Lords decision.

Lady Astor said both parties had pledged to wed for "better or worse." "I don't want to get into a controversy over this particular case, but it is better not to marry if you are not sure." She said she still felt that "if humanly possible, it is better not to permit divorce."

PROPHECIES FOR 1947

Sitting on the Fence

by NATHANIEL GUBBINS

THIS is the first staggered column in the history of columns. The history of columns goes back a long way, the first in Britain being the Doomsday Book.

That was written, I shouldn't wonder, by gloomy, bald types hired at about fourpence a year by William the Conqueror, who couldn't be bothered with such nonsense; and probably couldn't spell his Norman French either. Most successful men can't spell.

But, although the monetary reward of the despatched creature was small, and although William probably lopped their ears off if he didn't like their stuff, they wrote their pieces in precisely heated castles and were properly fed, wolfing their boars' heads and legs of beef, below the salt, maybe, but still wolfing.

This column is also written by a gloomy, bald type in a room that is sometimes heated and sometimes not heated, according to the times when the electric current is switched on or off.

The columnist's money is more than fourpence a year, but not much more when Mr Bloodsucker, the income tax collector, has taken his whack, and his ears are safe. Apart from that, he has no advantages over William's boys, as you shall see if you are still awake.

Switch on

WHEN the current is on, you get yourself nice and warm and are just boiling up to write a sentence when the current goes off and you feel like one of those people who get shut up in refrigerators.

Rupert & the New Pal—19

Next morning Rupert tells his mother what has happened. "Oh, dear," she says, "be careful! Bill and the black cat are mischievous animals." She makes up a big packet of sandwiches and off he goes. Soon he reaches St. Wilfrid's, and sure enough there is a hole in the hedge. Bill Badger is already there. "I don't know where the cat is. Let's go on through," cries Bill. "Surely we can't go into people's gardens that way," says Rupert doubtfully. "What would they think?"

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

Within a few minutes your hands are too cold even to cross out the sentence you have written, and you give up till the next switch on.

As you haven't got years and years to do your stuff, like the pampered old egg heads in the lovely warm castles, you have to be pretty smart at your work when the heat's turned on again.

Yes, sir. Pretty smart. No time for elegant prose. No time for the art that conceals art. No time for the skillfully turned sentence that rings sweetly in the ear of the appreciative reader.

No time for contriving the sudden surprise that knocks the reader flat. No time for the laborious composition which reads so easily that the reader wonders why he didn't write it himself.

In fact, no time to finish this. Here it comes. The cold. Hours of the cold.

Switch off

"There be triple ways to take with the eagle and the snake. And the way of a man with a maid. But the sweetest way to me is a ship's upon the sea. In the heel of a north-east trade."

KIPLING wrote that. It probably took him a week to get it right, either in the summer scribbling in his garden, or in the winter in front of a blazing fire. Poets don't write in freezing garrets, though some sentimentalists like to think they do. I have quoted this because it is easier to quote from memory than to write when you are cold. In fact, I thought of doing a Deen Inge on you and filling the entire column with quotations linked together with the odd sentence here and there.

It also suggested to me that there be triple ways for a columnist to take during the switch off.

He can go to bed. He can go for a walk. He can go and drown himself.

No he can't. The village pond is solid ice.

But he can go to the low tavern and drown himself another way. That is if he is not a strong-minded columnist.

I tried going to bed. But I got tired of dressing and undressing. I tried going for a walk, but I got tired of the northeast trade.

I tried going to the low tavern and got so so tired I slept all the rest of the day.

Switch on

HERE it comes. The lovely heat again. But only two hours of it. I shall have to be quick.

Two hours would be quite a long time if you started warm. William the Conqueror's egg heads would probably have written a whole sentence in that time. But it takes you an hour to warm up, leaving one hour.

One hour would be useful if you had been warm all day, with your mind ticking over ready to start with a stop-watch on your desk. Not that you would need a stop-watch these days.

But cold freezes the mind as well as the body. No wonder they sent clever people with dangerous thoughts to Siberia. Siberia would stop you thinking about anything but, hot soup.

And of all things here comes the hot soup. And there it goes all over the newspaper I was trying to read.

Of course, your day hands were frozen, but business is business. Damn it all, I was reading about cheese. And you know how funny cheese is. In England, anyway. It ranks next to sausages for a laugh.

It was a debate in the House of Commons. Some poor devil was asking Dr. Edith Summerskill, the Food Minister's right-hand austerity girl, if, after seven or eight long years, she could have a bit of English Stilton cheese or a bit of Double Gloucester. Instead of the imported lumps of soap they call cheese in foreign parts.

And what did she say? I don't know. The soup's all over her answer. But I expect it was some nanny-ish remark like "Imported soap is good for you."

The eternal nanny in all women comes out if you give them the slightest authority. Their ideal world is a vast nursery with everybody under proper control, everybody finishing up their crusts, everybody to bed early with clean hands and face, and everybody doing things they don't want to do because it's good for them, and nanny says so.

I mean nice women, of course. Not your slobbery-gibberly fly-by-nights who don't care if you eat poisoned cheese so long as...

Oh, lordy, lordy. Here comes the cold again. Just when I was reading an exorcisingly funny thing about

Heaven knows we need a few laughs

By JOHN MACADAM

TURNING our frostbitten feet from the sparkling pavements of the West End the other night to seek some alleviation of the horrors of peace, we entered the dressing room of that exquisite droll Dud Flanagan, with a vague idea that here would be a comic oasis in the economic desert.

One light glowered pallidly from a bracket and from the backmost gloom Flanagan said: "Be sure your Shinwell find you out."

It should be said that almost immediately he left for the south of France, but we take the trouble to quote this quote of a painful pun merely to put on record the fact that it is the only known joke that has come out of the present crisis.

Our observation is that the sense of humour, that carried the British through World War I through the transition to and through World War II, and appeared to be standing up strongly to the facts of demobilisation and rehabilitation, has now given up the ghost.

World War I produced Bainsfather to record such defiant jokes as the Better 'Ole, but the great point about Bainsfather was that he was not one wit in a sea of dullness; he was a wit echoing 100,000 wits. The jokes passed from man to man and trench to trench, in defiance of boredom, danger and death itself. Bainsfather immortalised.

THIS spirit ran through the years of preparation for the past war, and the people fortified themselves with it. It lasted right up to the beginning of the war, when a misguided war thought of hanging up his washing on the Siegfried Line. It showed itself in a new slang which sharpened the quality of its wit on its disregard of danger.

Deadly jabs—there was no future in them; anything you hadn't got, couldn't or wouldn't get—you'd had it; attacks on enemy shipping were shipping strikes. The spirit was there—and the wit to match it. Hard-bitten army men smiled at the R.A.F. Brylcreem Boys. Pestiferated civilians, carrying as much of a burden as any of them, rubbed the debris out of their eyes, smiled and hummed "When the lights go on again."

It was all good humoured, because it wasn't in their nature to be anything else. It was even good humoured when a grateful country hung sacklike demob suits on their shoulders and green pork pie hats on their heads. They joked about using the hat for keeping flowers in and the suit for scoring blackbirds off the beans.

Then they were all at peace again, and they grinned their way through the first difficult months of transition. They took the No Beer and the No Cigarettes signs with as much cheerfulness as they had left over. But the spontaneity began to go out of it. The smile didn't flicker so quickly. The jokes on politicians' names began to take on an acrid flavour.

NOW, it is our observation that calamity after calamity and the feeling that there are more round the corner has dulled the edge. Beaten about the head by bombs, damned with faint rations for years, frozen, blacked out and bewildered, the Briton would appear to have had a lot of the resiliency knocked out of him.

In pubs and clubs and queues he no longer laughs it off. If there is a smile it is a very smile, as though every silver lining had a cloud.

But maybe it will all come back again with a blink of sunshine. Maybe.

BY THE WAY

by Beachcomber

DR. STRABISMUS (Whom God Preserve) of Utrecht has announced his intention of making an attempt to reach the moon in a stratospheric rocket-ship.

Preparations have been made in great secrecy at Wageningen, where the enormous rocket is already in position, clamped between two hellionic struts, and built into a concrete base. The rocket works on the pressure principle, and is propelled by its own energy, generated in a forward nozzle made of plutonium. The backward drive of the radio-active force encased in the central chamber is sufficient to expel the gases, which set up continuous explosions in the tail, thus reversing the force of gravity and the pull of the earth's surface, and enabling the two dynamos in the steel cylinders to replenish the nucleus as fast as they are used up. There the matter rests at present.

Haute Cuisine
 I READ of "a machine which will process raw liver into an appetising savoury in less than three minutes, without cooking." This ought to make a good meal for the electronic brain, and it reminds me of the Strabismus method of knitting spaghetti into a close-meshed sweater, which could be worn or eaten or used to stuff trumpets with. Fiddle, the Italian to whom the song "Riddle Me" was dedicated, and who invented rissoles, had a way of tossing a pancake until it disappeared, which he called the Indian pancake trick. When gramophones were invented, he used to gather his friends round, put a pancake on the machine instead of a disc, and then laugh to see them mown down by bits of pancake.

Non-stop radio

THE B.B.C. Fourth Programme, to be started shortly, will be continuous. It will start on a given date, at a given hour, and will then proceed without pause, interval or surcease for three months, day and night. At the end of that time a corps of expert listeners will say, whether they think the public have had enough of it or not. It is thought that a Fifth Programme, lasting for two years without a break, may be needed to complete the work of battering the public into a state of complete exhaustion.

"DEAR LOIS LEEDS"

"Dear Lois Leeds—I have an awful sagging bust. Do you advise exercise to improve it?—P. F."

If you are grown and over 30, get a proper "bust" and practice good posture.

"Dear Lois Leeds—About four years ago I was operated on and ever since my hair has been falling out. Is there a good tonic?—MRS. O. F. T."

After an operation where either is used the hair is often dry and falls out. You must massage the scalp regularly with the fingertips. Use vaseline or a pomade and brush every night and every day. As your health improves, so will your hair.

"Dear Lois Leeds—I would like to know how to make my freckles go away.—JEAN W."

I have given the answer to this many times, but—here we go again! If you have a thin, sensitive, easy-to-freckle skin, stay out of Sun and Wind as much as possible. Or wear a heavy protective layer of foundation cream. Many readers ask me whether this or that bleach will remove freckles. I cannot say, as each skin reacts in a different way. Bleaches of a chemical base (and most of them are) are difficult to use yourself. I do not recommend them.

Grim Conflicts Below Surface At Moscow

BY JOHN HIGHTOWER

Diplomatic informants in Moscow say that grim conflicts of important power interests—among them control of any future German peace conference—leave dents on the surface of disagreements at the current Big Four Foreign Ministers' conference.

What many authorities view as a struggle for control of the coming German peace treaty conference revolves around the question of how many Allied states will participate with the Big Four and China.

Sang Before Kings, Now Penniless

A former opera idol, Mariette Mazarin, who—at the height of her brilliant international career—gave the world's first radio concert in New York, has been discovered penniless and half-blind in an old folks home in Grignani, southeastern France.

Madame Mazarin, now in her seventies, was for 40 years one of the world's leading operatic stars. She sang before Czar Nicholas and King Edward VII and was the confidante of such famous composers as Strauss, Massenet and Charpentier, whose works she helped to popularize.

But her fame did not last and she dropped out of the public eye, only to be found recently living in a small provincial hospice in the Department of Drome. Now her friends from her native city of Grenoble are planning to help her by holding a big benefit concert, in which she would sing again.

Star Pupil

In her present miserable state, Madame Mazarin's only source of happiness is her store of memories from the great days when she was surrounded by admirers who showered her with gifts and flowers. She is proudest when she hears the success of one of her former pupils, Mademoiselle Maselle, currently a star at the Metropolitan Opera, New York.

The French singer appeared in opera houses in most of the capitals of the world. Among her most famous roles were "Salome" at the Brussels Opera and "Electra" in which she appeared with Enrico Caruso in New York.

It was after the first performance of "Electra" on February 17, 1910, that Madame Mazarin, after taking 27 curtain calls, was paid a call in her dressing room by the inventor, Edison.

Edison asked her whether she would consent to sing over "a little electric apparatus" which would carry her voice to a waiting group of scientists, diplomats and newspapermen who were assembled to listen to the new invention more than 500 miles away.

Pioneer Radio Concert

Madame Mazarin agreed, and that night, in the presence of the Mayor of New York, she sang a pioneer radio concert, which was greeted enthusiastically by the press, which acclaimed her singing as much as it acclaimed the inventive genius of Edison.

During the World War of 1914-1918, Madame Mazarin gave up the opera stage and devoted her time to caring for wounded soldiers. She also organized many benefit performances to raise money for war victims. Later she started a singing school, one of the pupils of which was Mademoiselle Maselle.

Madame Mazarin has managed to conserve her celebrated "golden voice" and is eagerly looking forward to the time when she will once again sing at the benefit concert being planned for her.—United Press.

Heating By Infra-red

Available for an almost infinite variety of applications in industrial processes is an entirely new gas-fired infra-red radiant heating panel which will be on view at the first post-war British Industries Fair in London and Birmingham from May 5 to 16.

Among the many processes to which this form of heating may be successfully applied are the rapid drying of paints and lacquers, resinous powders and printing ink mixtures, the dehydration of paper, paper pulp, etc., the softening of plastic materials for punching and extrusion, and the curing of sheet rubber.

Comparative drying times by the infra-red and convection methods emphasize the value of the former. By the infra-red method bituminous paint on bedsteads, for example, dries in eight minutes against 300 minutes by convection; scientific instruments in eight minutes against an hour-and-a-half; kegs and drums, in four minutes instead of 12 hours (air dry); and wire (loose-leaf ledgers), in 45 seconds against 30 minutes.

United States Secretary of State George Marshall and British Foreign Secretary, Ernest Bevin are urging for the largest possible assemblage to include every nation which was at war with Germany.

Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov wants only those nations which actually fought against the Nazis to be represented.

This controversy recalls that the former United States Secretary of State, James Byrnes, contended that the Paris Peace Conference last summer was a good help to the Western powers in settling the five satellite peace treaties because it tested the East-West conflicts against a background of what he called world opinion.

Certainly on the straight East-West issues over Germany, the United States and Britain can count on a peace conference vote of support in relation to the number of states they can get into the conference.

Preparing To Depart

In face of the lack of current conference progress, what certain high-ranking quarters believe that about some quarters for long if there was not some little progress soon, in the Council. Such departures would not necessarily mean the conference would fold up, since the deputies of the Big Four and Foreign Ministers will be assigned to go ahead with the job on the Austrian and German peace treaties. But by now, pretty nearly everyone has an opinion of how this would work out.

Meanwhile, an official United States delegation statement characterized as "completely baseless" a report published in London that Marshall and Bevin are determined to leave Moscow on or about April 5 if nothing is accomplished in the Council by that date.

Marshall And Stalin

Whether properly or improperly, most observers are interpreting the absence of a meeting between Marshall and Generalissimo Stalin as an indication of the Kremlin's displeasure with the Truman programme for United States aid to Greece and Turkey, although many suspect that Russia is not quite ready for such a conference.

The Russian people, who had high hopes for the success of the conference when it convened, have grown pessimistic since President Truman's speech on Greek-Turkey aid. One Russian even asked if the United States was thinking of attacking the Soviet Union.

The American delegation feels it can quite conceivably go home without any agreements if "it is possible without unprofitable compromises."—Associated Press.

NEW MEDAL APPROVED

A new medal has been approved by the King, Mr Attlee announced in the Commons recently.

It will be given for specific service in Java, Sumatra and French Indo-China for Air Force Service up to October 4, 1945, and to internees in war prison camps in South-East Asia, Singapore and other parts.

About 70,000 will qualify for the award, including Navy and Army personnel who were engaged in close support of bomb and mine clearance.

Mr Attlee was replying to Mr H. Pursey (Lab., Hull, E.).

BLONDES HAVE MOST HAIR

Blondes have more hair on their heads than brunettes, redheads or brownettes, according to Samuel Grant, director of the Helene Curtis laboratories of Chicago.

He said some blondes have as many as 140,000 hairs on their skulls, brunettes and brownettes an average of 120,000 and redheads only 90,000. On the average, he said, one square inch of scalp contains about 1,000 hairs.—United Press.

Threat To Stay Out Of Empire

Dr Nicholas Murray Butler, President Emeritus of Columbia University, recently disclosed what he said were the first details of an historic meeting in the summer of 1921 at which Canada, Australia, New Zealand and India threatened to withdraw from the British Empire.

Dr Butler said the meeting took place while Empire representatives were in England for an Empire conference. The secret parley was at Chequers, the Prime Minister's country residence.

Mr Lloyd George, then Prime Minister, pledged those at the meeting to secrecy. Dr Butler declared, adding, "Their countries were prepared to withdraw from the British Empire and to set up independent existence—through revolution if necessary."

"Canada, Australia and New Zealand were not willing to remain members of the British Empire," Dr Butler said the Prime Minister told him. "They desired to be in a position to maintain their devoted loyalty to the Crown and to accept the principles of democracy as worked out by Britain since the Magna Carta, but they were not willing to accept the control of the British Parliament and Foreign Office."

It was not until 1931 that the British Parliament enacted the Statute of Westminster which set up the British Commonwealth of Nations, Dr Butler said.

Dr Butler declared that Britain and the United States should set up in their zones of Germany a similar commonwealth or federal government. He urged that they act without delay lest "other forces" prevent the establishment of a federal system in Germany.—Associated Press.

LUFTWAFFE GIVES WAY TO POTATOES

Many of the airfields from which the German Air Force dominated the skies of Europe for two years will be devoted to potato crops this year.

The quadripartite action of the four occupying allies has almost entirely wiped out all traces of the once proud Luftwaffe.

Lieutenant Beverly Steadman, chief of the Air Forces Branch of the United States Armed Forces division, says disarmament of the German air force now is "essentially complete."

In the American zone alone, 4,000 German planes and 30,000 motors have been destroyed. Special air equipment has either been destroyed or devoted to peace-time uses.

Close Watch Kept

Many airfields have been turned over to agriculture.

The American, French, British and Russian air forces' branches are keeping a close watch on the most prominent and most militaristic of the Luftwaffe's former pilots who might hope to revive interest in the German air force. Accurate organizations, including schools and athletic clubs, are watched closely for any effort to introduce militaristic tendencies.—Associated Press.

War Crimes Suspects Break Gaol

Batavia, Apr. 1. A large-scale manhunt is under way for eight Japanese war crimes suspects who escaped last week from the Tjipinang prison near here after a gun battle with the guards.

Six persons were killed and two wounded in the battle. The break, it was reported, was planned by 50 Japanese prisoners but only 12 were known to have participated. The guards killed four. Another was found dead later in a native compound. An Ambonese soldier who had been imprisoned in the same gaol on a military charge was killed by the fugitives when he attempted to assist the guards. One guard was slightly wounded, and another seriously hurt. The escaped prisoners are believed to be members of the Kempetai.—Associated Press.

U.S. Challenge To Soviets Make Concessions, Or—

Moscow, Apr. 1. The United States to-day challenged the Soviet to begin making concessions on Germany or postpone indefinitely negotiation on the German peace treaty.

Soviet Foreign Minister Vyacheslav Molotov will have an opportunity to reveal an answer late to-day when the Ministers, for the first time, here meet in a small informal session, accompanied only by two advisers and one interpreter each. It will be recalled last November, after 14 months of fruitless negotiation on the Italian and satellite treaties, former U.S. Secretary of State James F. Byrnes proposed adjournment with an announcement of failure, whereupon the next day the Soviets began compromising. A significant reaction to Gen. George C. Marshall's speech was the failure of Moscow papers to mention either it or Mr. Molotov's reply. Instead, they carried one paragraph. Observers considered significant that Mr. John Foster Dulles—Gen. Marshall's Republican adviser who has been the particular target of Soviet press attacks—at his own request is not attending today's informal conference. It was interpreted as part of an effort to eliminate any possible stumbling blocks to Soviet concessions, if they are willing to make any. Gen. Marshall meanwhile announced his advisers at the conference will be Ambassador Bedell Smith and State Department counselor Ben Cohen.—United Press.

Foreign Office Won't Let Down Romance

London, Apr. 1. The British Foreign Office promised to-day to join issue with Generalissimo Josef Stalin in the cause of international romance. Stalin had refused exit visas for the Russian wives of 15 Britons who married while on Government service in Moscow, most of them during the war.

VIET NAMH WORKMEN IN RIOTS

Agon, SW France, Apr. 1. Loudspeaker appeals and tear gas bombs were used by the French authorities here today to get several hundred Viet Namh workmen, who rioted yesterday, to quit their barracks. Rioting broke out in the town of Agon, where Viet Namh workmen and pro-French Indo-Chinese workers. Two Annamites were killed and several others were wounded. The bodies of those killed were to-day reported to be badly mutilated. The Viet Namh rioters—described to-day as "mutineers"—barred themselves in one section of the barracks. After tear gas bombs were thrown behind the barricades to-day, about 40 men came out rubbing their eyes. Later, a second attack was made with gas bombs, causing a few more to surrender.—Reuter.

REPORT ON WAR'S RAVAGES IN ASIA

BY CHARLES A. GRUMICH
(Associated Press Staff Correspondent)

New York, Apr. 1.

The ravages of the Orient, caused by the prowar Japanese expansion and Japanese wartime attack, plundering, dislocations, scorched earth tactics and mass destruction, must be taken into account as reconstruction is planned, according to long-range views of experts which have been presented to the United Nations Economic Commission for the Far East and Asia.

HE FINDS A NEW FLOCK OF SINNERS

Hastings, Apr. 1.

The Vicar of Christ Church, who contended recently with ghouls and vandals, found today he had a whole new flock of sinners. He found that his parishioners were "messing around with the Ten Commandments," and said he would not be surprised if they would be visited with divine displeasure.

The Rev R. B. Flynn said the people of Hastings went too far when they voted for Sunday movies.

"There was a case in Martinique where the people also went too far," he said. "They held a mock religious ceremony on Good Friday and crucified a pig. The next day a volcano erupted and killed every one in town except a man in a dungeon."

"I do not prophesy anything so dreadful will happen in Hastings. But messing around with the Ten Commandments only gets the people into trouble—and Sunday movies break the Fourth Commandment."

The vicar took care off for his warning from directing the filling-in of 14th century graves in the church cemetery which were opened by ghouls, and the scraping of red paint brushed on pews last week by vandals, who also ripped the altar hangings and broke candlesticks.—United Press.

A report of the working group for Asia and the Far East made public, recites a long story of physical destruction in war.

China, the longest sufferer under Japanese expansion, provides a cardinal example of postwar internal conflict, and encompasses a reconstruction problem that cannot be appraised finally until the current strife between the Nationalist Government forces and Chinese Reds is ended.

The report does not over-emphasize the fighting which broke out on new lines after the Japanese surrender, mainly in China, Indonesia and Indo-China.

In one section on the Indo-China federation, the report cites looting by the Japanese from the time of their pre-Pearl Harbour entrance at Tonkin in September 1940 and the destruction resulting from the hostilities caused by the enemy, by regular Allied and French troops, by resistance troops inside the country, or by continued internal strife.—Associated Press.

VIET NAMH Problem

Thus by roundabout means presumably on the basis of French reports, the internal strife in Indo-China is reported to the UNO as a medium of economic destruction which must be repaired if the French Far Eastern outpost is to be woven into a peacetime pattern for Asia.

Paradoxically, the Viet Namh rebellion can intrude into UNO circles only as it affects the economic problems of Asia and the world at large. As a central problem of the French, it cannot be presented as a matter for the attention of the UNO Security Council.

In the report, the description of scorched earth damage to oil, tin, shipping and harbour installations is contrasted by the more optimistic picture of the Netherlands East Indies.

The report says: "The islands' recovery has been enormously retarded by internal conflict and social unrest since VJ-Day, but the recent agreement between the NEI Government and the Indonesian Republic should pave the way to a comprehensive rehabilitation programme."

Economic Effects. But here again, internal conflict has shown itself as affecting economic stability, as evidenced by recent incidents in which both American and British merchant ships have been stopped by the Dutch authorities seeking to impound cargoes loaded at Indonesian ports.

These developments have come too recently for any possible mention in the report to UNO, and Lieutenant Governor General Hubertus J. van Mook of the NEI not long ago promised that the situation soon would permit open trading with the outside world—meaning apparently that ownership of estate produce would be established in the agreement between the Dutch and Indonesians.

The report contains no mention of the Chinese civil war, which the United States tried to avert through the now abandoned efforts of General George C. Marshall and his peace teams.—Associated Press.

Winnie Steals The Show

London, Apr. 1.

Mr Winston Churchill, reportedly called Britain's No. 1 Communist baiter by Radio Moscow, stole the show from Prime Minister Attlee at the Soviet Embassy's reception to-night for the Russian delegation visiting England.

While Mr Attlee drank half a dozen toasts in port, the wartime Premier insisted on real vodka and clinked his glass "time and time again, speaking in Russian 'Za vashu zdorovie' (your health). He said, Stalin taught him this. The Russians crowded up to shake his hand.

Mr Attlee, who wore a red flower in his buttonhole, left just as Churchill arrived.—United Press.

George Cross For Padre

London, Apr. 1.

The award is announced to-day of the George Cross to a South African-born chaplain in the Royal Air Force, the Rev Mr Herbert Cecil Pugh, who, in the words of the official citation, "went to certain death" to injured airmen on a sinking ship.

The troopship Anselm was torpedoed while on the way from Britain to West Africa on July 5, 1941. The Rev Mr Pugh insisted on being lowered to the injured men in a flooded hold. He was last seen kneeling in prayer with water up to his shoulders the moment before the ship sank.—Reuter.

New Factors In Asian Relations

New York, Apr. 1.

The New York Herald-Tribune, in an editorial today, commented on the growing Asiatic unity of thought, and warned nations with Far East interests to take the new factors into consideration.

The editorial said: "Members of the Viet Namh delegation from Indo-China received an enthusiastic welcome at the Asian Relations Conference in New Delhi. It seems apparent that political leaders at the conference support the Viet Namhese in their conflict with the French."

"This emphasises once again that new factors must be taken into account by nations which have interests in the Orient, and that one of these is the reaction of Asiatic peoples to events in any particular Asiatic country."

"Some years hence, it may be necessary for any country attempting a major line of policy in Asia to take into consideration Indian opinion, Chinese opinion and Indonesian opinion, regardless of whether the policy directly affects India or China or Indonesia."

The Possibilities

"A strong India might dominate power in all southern Asia. A strong China might have influence in the Far East as wide as that possessed by China in the greatest days of the empire. A strong Japan might have interests throughout southeast Asia and the principle island regions of the Pacific."

"In view of these possibilities, remote as they may seem at the moment, it is not over-early for statesmen of Western powers to take into account the desires of all Asiatic peoples. The little good that will be gained in the next few years could pay dividends for generations."—United Press.

Gandhi At Conference

New Delhi, Apr. 1.

Mohandas K. Gandhi, addressed the Inter-Asian Conference to-day, urging approval of a permanent Asian Institute to meet regularly but "not wage war with Europe and America."

Gandhi advocated a one-world principle as well as Asian unity, saying: "I would not want to live in this world if it was not going to be one world. I would like to see this realised in my lifetime—not in this generation, but in my lifetime."

With P. B. Javaharlal Nehru holding the microphone for him, Gandhi smilingly apologised for his weak voice and for addressing the delegates from a sitting position.

He said: "My eyes are failing me, my ears are failing me, and one day the lamp will be extinguished."

Gandhi made an impressive entrance into the conference hall at the Lady Irwin Girls' College. He walked down the aisle past a double row of white-clothed Indian girl students, flanked by Nehru and as Moslem, follower in non-violence, the six-foot-seven Pathan, Abdul Ghafoor Khan, called the "Frontier Gandhi".—United Press.

RUSSIAN STAND ON DAIREN

Moscow, April 1.

The Tass Agency to-day denied Chinese press reports that the Soviets were not admitting the Chinese administration into the Dairen region, and said Russia has repeatedly proposed to the Chinese Government—the last time on March 7—that such an administration be established.

Tass added: "Up to the present no answer has been received from the Chinese Government. Such a situation evidently can be explained by the fact that in China there is a certain paralysis of power."—United Press.

Salazar Denies He Is Dictator

Lisbon, Apr. 1.

Premier Dr Antonio de Oliveira Salazar, in a statement issued on the installation of the new executive committee of the official party, Uniao Nacional, affirmed that Portugal is ruled by a constitutional government, and denied charges of dictatorship.

He said that the country's constitution was affirmed by the people through a plebiscite, the head of the state was elected by direct vote, an assembly handled the legislative function, and the judicial part of the government was independent and not appointed by the president as in the American republics.

Dr Salazar criticised foreign press comment and speculation on an impending change in the Lisbon government.

"We do not intend to leave the government," he said. "On the contrary we intend to remain."

He said any country needs a strong government to rebuild its economic life and its material existence. He pointed out that too great emphasis on political parties had weakened many states, particularly in Latin America.

Will Fight Opposition

"After 20 years of the new doctrine and our example of a National State, existing for the benefit of all Portuguese," he said, "we are persisting the same mental attitudes among the opposition, the same party feeling. The opposition has changed nothing and wants to bring back the old life."

"Obviously we do not want to deliver power to them. The National Revolution, begun 20 years ago, cannot be limited to an administrative reorganisation. It must be capped by a political reformation, which has thus far awaited the completion of other tasks."

Dr Salazar promised to turn the government's attention henceforth towards such a political rejuvenation "without abandoning power which has brought the country 20 years of peace and social and material development."

He suggested enlarging the Uniao Nacional to include all Portuguese. He said the government would retain its anti-party convictions and promised a new, vigorous fight against those who opposed the present regime.—United Press.

Royal Family Arrives In Johannesburg

Johannesburg, Apr. 1. A crowd estimated at 1,000,000 witnessed the Royal Family's triumphal arrival in Johannesburg today. From mine, factory and office in Johannesburg they came, and from towns and villages within 100 miles radius. They congregated from Monday afternoon outside the City Hall, with blankets, rugs and pillows they stubbornly persisted in their all-night vigil despite a heavy rain storm.

The Johannesburg population was overnight increased by at least 250,000, and for most of these only improvised accommodation was available. Hotels, boarding houses and lodgings were out of the question for the majority of the visitors.

Only a few decades ago, this city of proud tall buildings and golden opulence, with its many-sided commercial and industrial life was a small mining camp.

Johannesburg's crowded greetings to their Majesties and to the Princesses was like that of Cape Town, Durban, Pretoria, Port Elizabeth and other cities but more amplified.

The Transvaal metropolis, determined not to be outdone by other cities, was bedecked with mile upon mile of bunting and flags, and many spectators wore colourful costumes. Snack vendors, balloon hawkers and peddlers of souvenirs were unable to keep up with the demand.

Two hundred thousand non-Europeans lined sections of the route to hail the "father of the nations."

The Royal Family's day here will be one of the most crowded of their tour, there being on the programme presentations, inspections, unveilings, the opening of an agricultural show, a civic luncheon, children's shows, horse racing, a banquet, a young people's ball and fireworks in the evening.—Associated Press.

Immigrants Reach Cyprus

HAIFA DOCK AREA STILL BURNING

Jerusalem, Apr. 1.

Smoke from bomb-hit fires continued to rise from the ruins of part of the far-flung Haifa oil dock area 36 hours after the underground attack that laid waste to an estimated £1,000,000 worth of oil products and equipment.

The investigators are still being kept away from the scene by the terrific heat and by burning oil in two tanks.

Fourteen tanks were destroyed in the blaze, which followed three explosions early on Monday morning.

Palestine Government officials called a second conference to-day to discuss the blast.—Associated Press.

COMMUNAL STRIFE CONTINUES

Calcutta, Apr. 2.

Calcutta's Communist trouble continued to-day with six new fires and stringent measures by the police and military trying to stop the half-scattered fighting and looting.

There were 90 arrested and one rioter was shot dead. Two others died in battles, and 11 cases of arson were reported. Thirty-two buildings were destroyed in fires yesterday.

Unofficial reports said eight were killed yesterday in Calcutta and 20 others died in fighting in the Howrah industrial suburb.—United Press.
